List & Label Viewer Certified For Windows Vista

Software producer combit discloses that the compatibility of the List & Label Viewer with Windows Vista, which has just been released a couple of months ago, is now certificated. As developer components like List & Label cannot be certified directly, combit decided to have the List & Label Viewer tested as a substitute. The application passed the rigorous test and received the coveted certificate. combit ensured the Vista compatibility already in the early beta stage of the operating system and thus was able to start with the certification process even before the official release of the new Windows version. Due to the extensive changes of the new operating system combit strongly recommends not to use older List & Label versions under Vista. Registered customers of the current version 12 are provided with a service pack free of charge via download.

Founded in 1988 combit has achieved brand name recognition with the development component List & Label and Windows standard software for CRM. combit is one of very few German development component manufacturers with worldwide success.
